Workshop Structure

The workshop is made up of two groups of people

1. Participants who are interested in setting their own constellations and to be representatives for other people constellations. The number of participants doing their own constellation is limited to 6 persons.
2. Participants who came only as observers and/or representatives for other people's constellations, limited to maximum of 14 persons.

Both groups benefit from constellations, because even being a representative or observer taps into our unresolved issues and helps us to create some shift.

Each constellation usually takes from 25 to 45 minutes, but it could be longer or shorter than this. There are 5 to 6 constellations done in a one day workshop.

The practical course of events for each constellation:

1. The person doing the constellation states the issue briefly. No history is needed; the person just explains the nature of the issue.
2. The facilitator asks some questions about the family structure and the most important events from the constellation view.
3. The facilitator decides which family members are relevant in solving the issues and asks the participant to choose the representatives to take the role of those family members. The participant is usually asked to choose a representative for himself/herself.
4. The participant feels his way in the centre of the room and places representatives into the position which seems proper and then sits back and observes.
5. At this time the energy field forms around the representatives and they experience the feelings of the real people they represent, even if they have no previous knowledge of their personalities or history. They also very often behave like the real person and have some knowledge of events never revealed to them.
6. The facilitator leads the constellation, connecting with the energy of the field, observing representatives, asking questions as the dynamics of the family unfolds and looking for the best resolutions.
7. At the end, when the solution is reached and the best possible order restored, the client takes his position in the Constellation to experience himself the new energy and healing.
